

OGC HAS REVIEWED.

IV. CONCLUSIONS:

A. CIA does have a sufficient operational interest to justify the expenditure of Agency funds in acquiring insurance against normal covered loss on the personal and real property of agents where such property is essential to a CS operation.

V. ACTION RECOMMENDED:

A. ...

B. ... If the agent has insufficient funds for this purpose, the field station should, in deserving individual cases, through regular project procedures, request authority for: (1) reimbursement for payment of an insurance premium, or (2) augmentation of salary to amortize payment of insurance premiums. The agent should, of course, be required to submit proof of insurance following payment to him. Authority to reimburse the agent for his expense of acquiring insurance or to augment salary for the same purpose should in no event be granted where the measure of compensation to the agent for the official use of his property contains an increment for insurance cost. Where personal or real property of an agent is used for Agency purposes only part of the time, an attempt should be made to arrive at an equitable pro-rata agreement with the agent concerning reimbursement for insurance premiums.

C. that Headquarters sympathetically consider allotment of funds in projects for this purpose in individual cases when justified in accordance with the criteria described in Paragraph B above.
